THE ROMAN REMAINS OF FRANCE The Emperor Napoleon has pr. jected a work which is likely to give occupation to work which is likely to give occupation to all the French savans who cocupy themselves with geographical, historical, numismatical, or antiquarian researches. It has been determined to prepare a detailed account of the Roman remains to be found in France, from the invasion of Julius Casar to the overthrow of the Roman empire. The Gallic provinces, particularly the southern PERUVIAN GUANO Gallie provinces, particularly the southern ones, were rich in substantial works erected by the Romans, such as harbors, bridges, aqueducts, amphitheatres, bathe, military roads, fortified camps, and others of a less substantial nature: and as each year obliter. ates some remnant of these monuments of French history, the importance of obtaining an accurate record of them will be apparent. The restoration of the topography of R man Gaul will be one of the principal objects contemplated; and when the physical changes which nineteen centuries have produced are taken into account, we shall obtain an idea of the scale on which the work is to be conducted. The minister of public instruction has the superintendence of this undertaking, which is probably the most important of the kind yet projected, and has addressed an invitation to all the learned men and societies, to aid in its accomplishment. The readiness with which they have responded indicates an enthusiasm for the prosecution of the work, which will render its monument of enlightened seal and antiquarian research.

LAUGHTER.

"There is a time to laugh," says wisdom, and that time comes pretty often, if you would be healthy and happy. It is recorded of Dr. Griffin, that when President of Andover Theological Seminary, he convened the students at his room one evening, and told them he had observed that they were all growing thin and dyspeptical from a neglect of the exercise of Christian laughter, and he insisted upon it that they should go through a company drill in it, then and there. The Doctor was an immense man-over six feet in height, with great amplitude of chest and most magisterial manners. "Here," said he to the first, "you must practice; now hear me!" and bursting out into a sonorous laugh, he fairly obliged his pupils, one by one, to join, till the whole were almost convulsed "That will do for once," said the doctor, "and now mind and keep in practice!"

A DIABOLICAL YOUNG WRETCH.

Our readers will doubtless remember the fact of a lad named Hubber, only ten years of age, having been tried by the tribunal of Bolkenhaim, in Silesia, and condemned to five years' imprisonment, for having wilfully caused the deaths of five other children with whom he was at play. His little comrades, at the ages of three, four, five, seven and eight, were induced by him to go into a large chest, when he closed the lid, and notwithstanding their cries and groans, sat on it to prevent their getting out until they were dead. The sentence was appealed against before the court of Breslau, but as the young miscreant admitted that be had committed the act with premeditation, the sentence was confirmed.

SNICKERERS.

There are many people who consider themselves well bred, and who go much in society, who nevertbeless violate the simplest rules of politeness, by the very silly and de-graded habit of spickering. The word, if homely, is expressive. We are accustomed nect a smile with things pleasant and graceful; and a laugh seems called forth by something genuinely amusing. But when one unfortunately makes a trifling error in conversation, or if some portion of the dress is disarranged, then these highly civilized young ladies or gentlemen, look at each other, and spicker! "Oh the Spickerers!"

A NEW YORK DODGE.

The Glens Falls (N. Y.) paper tells of a gentleman "of standing" in that village who had an inconvenient quantity of his own autographs in circulation, and who played erazy about the streets for a few days, and then mysteriously disappeared. His creditors said "poor fellow," and were glad to sell bie notes for 25 cents on the dollar. In a few days the "pool fellow" suddenly appeared again, and received a heap of cancelled paper from bie agent, who had bought it up. S mething bandsome was made by the operation, and his "standing" is just as good as ever!

AN ANECDOTE OF COL. BENTON. "Sir-r." said Col. Benton, not many days before he died-PSir-r, there are three disreputable resorte in which, be it remembered, I have never set foot, and I name them in the order of their infamy-the worst last. I allude to a house of ill-fame, a gamblinghell, and a national convention. Yes, Sir, I am free of these."

Why there are more pious Women than Men -The reason there are more pious women than men is not because women are weaker, or their passions less powerful, but because a feeling of dependence is native in the female beart. It is because the pride of independence has little or no place there. It is because the female mind has to undergo comparatively a small revolution to become religious. One powerful barrier that stands before the path of every man in his approach to the valley of humiliation does not oppose the passage of the true woman. It is very rare that those who are denominated "strongminded women" become religious. The pride of personal independence prevents this.

So sweet and so natural a thing is piety among women that men have come to regard a woman without it as strange, if not unhealthy, and godless men often select pious wives, because they see that piety softens and deepens and elevates every natural grace of person, and every accomplishment of mind.
